Covers the main office apps: Word, Excel, Powerpoint, and Outlook. Documents software is one of the best tools available for creating, editing, and sharing digital files. It can help to organize, store, and manage your documents, spreadsheets, presentations, and other documents, whether you're a student, a professional, a hobbyist, or a home user. You can use a desktop document editing program, or a web-based version, and you can easily share your files with others on the same network, or across the Internet. Desktop vs. Online Documents Software There are a number of desktop document editors and online document editors, with many more on the horizon. So, how do you know which is best for you? There are three categories of documents software: Desktop Applications These programs are usually free, and have many of the standard features of office suites. They usually offer additional features for people who work in an office, or at a job that requires lots of printed documents to be produced. You can also sometimes find other tools, like a page editor, that you can use to produce and print pages of material in this type of software. Online Applications An online office suite is essentially a web-based version of a desktop application, but it usually comes with fewer features than a desktop version. You can find online document editors that allow you to edit web pages, spreadsheets, or presentations. Some allow you to connect directly to databases, like a Google Docs, OneNote, or other cloud based database that you can use to share files with others. Online versions usually have some limited versioning, so you can edit your files online, and then share the files as a link. You can also use desktop and online versions of Microsoft Office together. For example, you can use Microsoft Office Online to edit, and SharePoint Online to create and share files with other people. Hybrid Apps Hybrid applications are a combination of online and desktop features. Some offer different features for different file types, like a web editor for web pages, or a desktop editor for things like spreadsheets. Hybrid solutions can help to bridge the gap between desktop and online solutions. They can also allow you to use a desktop editor in a web browser, and online applications in a desktop editor. Hybrid solutions may even allow you to edit a document directly in the cloud. How to Choose a Desktop Document Editor You can choose a desktop document editor based 82157476af
